LOST PETITION

by Jack Ayoub

Texas historians have long ignored Tejano (Texas born citizens of Mexican and Spanish ancestry) contributions for Texas Independence until 1991 when Dr Frank De La Teja translated the memoirs of Juan Seguin in which he listed 20 Tejanos who fought at the Battle of San Jacinto under his command as Captain of the Texas Calvary.

Now that figure has to be corrected because of a recently discovered petition, dated Jan 12, 1875, written to the Texas State Comptroller by Lt. Col Juan Seguin, Capt Antonio Menchaca, and 18 other Tejanos from the San Antonio area who felt discriminated against by the Texas government against Tejano war veterans of the Texas revolution for their military pensions.

According to the petition, Gen. Sam Houston sent Capt Seguin's second in command, Liet, Salvador Flores with about 30 Tejanos to escort and protect the settlers in the Runaway Scrape eastward from the approaching Mexican army: 15-20 Tejanos, including Blas Herrera, Seguin's best Tejano scout, to Deaf Smith to serve as scouts for the Texas Army. About 25 Tejanos were sent south of San Antonio to protect the homes and ranches from Indian raids. There were 3 sick Tejanos left behind at San Felipe, and the baggage and supplies at Harrisburg were guarded by about 10 Tejanos, the horses were left in the care of about 4-5 Tejanos. In addition to those 20 brave Tejanos on the Battlefield of San Jacinto, the more correct number of Tejanos in the Texas Army is closer to about 120, not just 20, that was previously thought.

Texas history can now add a new chapter in the Texas history books to reflect the participation and contributions of Tejano soldiers who fought and died for Texas Independence against Mexico in 1836.

On March 9th, the city of San Benito will be celebrating Texas Independence at the county stock show fairgrounds on East 510 to honor and remember the bravery and courage of the Texans and Tejanos who fought side by side for Texas Independence.

Adina de Zavala

by Jack Ayoub

Texas history remembers Clara Driscoll as the “Savior of the Alamo.” But forgets her partner and associate, Adina De Zavala, who shared her love and passion for Texas history and heroes, as well as each having grandfather who fought for Texas independence. In 1889, Adina and several women in San Antonio would meet to discuss Texas heritage and history, But in 1893 this historical society would join the Daughters of the Republic of Texas (DRT), the De Zavala Chapter, in honor of her grandfather and first vice president of the Republic of Texas, Lorenzo De Zavala Sr. Clara Driscoll would later join the DRT in 1903, and together with Adina would save the Alamo chapel from destruction when Clara came up with $65,000 of her own money along $10,000 raised by the DRT to prevent commercial interest from acquiring it.

The Texas Legislature would authorize the state purchase from Miss Driscoll in January 1905 and give custody and maintenance of the Alamo to the DRT, but soon afterwards, the DRT would split into two rival factions, one led by Adina De Zavala and the other by Clara Driscoll. Miss Driscoll wanted the Long Barracks torn down to give a full unobstructed view of the Alamo chapel, believing that the Long Barracks had been constructed after the fall of the Alamo.

Miss De Zavala believed some of the heaviest fighting of the battle, including hand-to-hand combat, occurred in the Long Barracks, and later excavations would prove Adina was correct in her belief. When Driscoll and her rival faction expressed their desire to destroy the Long Barracks in 1908, De Zavala would fight the 2nd battle of the Alamo by barricading herself in the Long Barracks for three days and night, defying a court order and boycott of food and water (although not strictly enforced) until she was certain that this historic structure was safe from destruction.

The governor of Texas would later side with Adina and preserve the Long Barracks. But a judge would rule in favor of Clara Driscoll and her group as the true chapter of the DRT. No longer affiliated with the DRT, Adina would found the Texas Historical and Landmarks Association in 1912, with chapters all across Texas, to find and preserve the Spanish Governors Palace, several San Antonio missions, and the homes of Texas patriots Jose Antonio Navarro and Francisco Ruiz, Tejano signers of the Texas Declaration for Independence, Adina always wanted the Texas public schools to be named for Texas and Tejano patriots of the Texas war for independence, as well as for everyone to fly the Texas flag on March 2 to remember Texas Independence Day. Until the day they died, Driscoll and De Zavala never reconciled their differences.

When Driscoll died on July 17, 1945, her body would lie in state at the Alamo for everyone to come and pay their last respects with the Texas flag flying at half-staff. When De Zavala died the before Texas Independence Day, March 1, 1955, her funeral procession would only drive slowly by the Alamo. Texas has the Alamo and the Long Barracks to honor and remember the bravery and courage of our Texans and Tejano soldiers who fought and died for Texas Independence, thanks to Adina De Zavala, "co-savior of the Alamo," along with her partner and associate, Clara Driscoll.

Antonio Menchaca

by Jack Ayoub

Texas history has forgotten another Tejano hero, Sargent Antonio Menchaca of the Texas Army, a personal friend of Jim Bowie and General Sam Houston, who fought for Texas independence at the Battle of San Jacinto in Capt Juan Seguins company of Tejano soldiers.

When Davy Crockett and his Tennessee Mounted Volunteers first came to San Antonio in Feb 1836, Col Jim Bowie and Antonio Menchaca were the first to greet them, and Menchaca personally escorted Crockett to the home of Erasmo Seguin, father of Vapt Juan Seguin, to rest for the first few nights. A fiesta was organized by Menchaca to celebrate Crocketts arrival and a second fiesta later to celebrate George Washingtons birthday. It was at the latter fiesta that Sargent Menchaca received a scouting report from Blas Herrera, on of Capt Seguins tejano scouts, that General Santa Anna army was close to San Antonio. Lt Col Travis would only repomd to this scouting report that he was to busy dancing with the prettiest girl in San Antonio, but Col Bowie read it and believed the scouting report to be accurate.

At the Battle of San Jacinto, Menchaca served as the English translator for Capt Seguin company Tejano soldiers, as well as to cook Santa Annas first meal as captive soldier. After the Texas war for Independence, Menchaca would serve the city of San Antonio as alderman, and as mayor pro tem in July 1838. In July 1842, Capt Menchaca commanded a frontier company of soldiers between San Antonio river and the Rio Grande River and was wounded in the leg trying to defend San Antonio against the invading Mexican army led by General Adrian Woll in Sept 1842.

Antonio Menchaca, along with Juan Seguin and 17 other Bexar (San Antonio) residents in 1875, wrote the Texas Comptroller of Public Accounts claiming discrimination by the Texas government against Tejano war veterans of the Texas Revolution for their military pensions. Texas history has forgotten many of our Texas and Tejano heroes, but on Feb 26th and Feb 27th, San Benito will celebrating Texas Independence Day with a history symposium with 3 national historians on Friday night, Feb 26th, and with horse back riders, riding down main street, 11am, Saturday, to start the event and with gun powder loading musket re-enactors with authentic historical outfits reliving several skirmishes and the Battle of the Alamo. It is free to public, and all Texans and Tejanos are invited to a Day of Education and a Day of Celebration.

Erasmu Seguin

by Jack Ayoub

Capt Juan Seguin and his company of Tejano soldiers were on the battlefield of San Jacinto on April 21, 1836 with Gen. Sam Houston and the Texan Army to achieve Texas independence from Mexico, but it was Tejanos like Juan Seguin's father Erasmu who were the first to dream of an independent Texas.

Erasmu Seguin was prominent citizen, politician and businessman from San Antonio, serving as postmaster from 1807 to 1835 with only two political interruptions, and as alcalde (mayor) in 1820. Governor Antonio Martinez in 1821 appointed him to inform Moses Austin that his petition to start a colony in Texas had been approved. Several months after Moses Austin's death, Erasmu Seguin would start a lifelong professional and business relationship with Stephen E. Austin, who would often stay at Seguin's ranch, Casa Blanca, whenever he was in the San Antonio area. Davy Crockett also spent a few nights at Seguin's ranch when he first came to the Alamo.

Erasmu Seguin's most important service was his appointment as a Texas representative to the Mexican Federal Congress that wrote the Constitution of 1824, promoting the interests of Tejanos in San Antonio as well as the new Anglo-American settlers. After General Santa Ana came to power and did away with the Constitution of 1824, Erasmu Seguin, together with his son Juan, organized a convention opposed to the Mexican dictator in 1834. In October 1835, because of his political actions and the military actions of his son, Juan, Mexican General Cos stripped Erasmu Seguin of his position as postmaster- and of his horse, forcing Erasmu to walk 3- miles to his ranch. He used this opportunity to ask for volunteers for his son's company of Tejano soldiers.

Erasmus Seguin

by Jack Ayoub

During the Texas Revolution, the Texan Army was supplied with beef, corn, cattle and horses from Erasmo Seguin's ranch. In 1840 a grateful Republic of Texas compensated Erasmo Seguin with $ 3000.00 for all his patriotic efforts for Texas independence, March 2 was Texas Independence Day, and the City of San Benito again marked this great Texas holiday with a day of education and celebration to remember and honor the bravery, courage and the contributions of Texans and Tejanos, like Erasmo Seguin, for Texas independence.

Muñoz had the honor of being invited to speak on Dr. Garcia's contributions to the civil rights movement at the University of North Texas last year.

His dedication to teaching and learning has extended far beyond the classroom and the college and has manifested itself in his commitment to collaborating with several local communities to build a series of public programs that showcase local culture and history. Communities in Starr, Hidalgo and Cameron counties have benefitted from Muñoz's work through a series of cultural (living history) festivals, lectures, traveling exhibits and musical presentations.

Muñoz enjoys his time away from his teaching and community service by collecting antiques including his most recent acquisition a vintage Mercedes Benz. Muñoz is also a business (EVEA Properties) owner, and acknowledges that all would not be possible without the support of his wife, Veronica, his daughter Ashley and son Elizandro III, M.D.
